Exercise 1:

_____ 1. Families can benefit from not watching TV. Instead of watching TV, families should spend time together talking or playing games, or even going for a walk. Also, if the TV isn't on, a family is more apt to enjoy quiet time reading. In my country, people don't watch much TV.

_____ 2. Families can benefit from not watching TV. In my country, TV programs are broadcast only from 5 p.m. to 11 p.m. The rest of the day, there are no programs, so people spend their free time talking to, and taking walks with, their family members.

_____ 3. Another good source of energy is the wind. Many years ago in my country, Denmark, we decided that we didn't want to have nuclear power. Instead, we began to rely on windmills. Now, we are getting 7% of our electricity from wind mills. By 2030, we expect this to rise to 50%.

_____ 4. Another good source of energy is the wind. Wind, unlike oil, is a good source because we never have to worry about running out of it. Also, every year wind mills are improving in design, meaning that they can produce energy more efficiently. In my country, Denmark, we use a lot of windmills for energy.

_____ 5. Competition among high school students can have not only positive effects, but also some negative ones. I've noticed a common way that American high school students try to show their superiority. It is by the clothes that they wear. Some of them spend a lot of money in order to look more fashionable than their classmates. In my country, high school students have to wear uniforms, so we don't have this problem.

_____ 6. Competition among high school students can have not only positive effects, but also some negative ones. I've noticed a common way that American high school students try to show their superiority. It is by the clothes that they wear. This is not a problem in my country because all high school students have to wear uniforms. Because everyone dresses the same, nobody knows whose family is rich or poor. Also, students don't feel the need to buy the most recent fashion because nobody is wearing them. Although some students complain about their uniforms, most students realize the advantages.
